HONGKONG, MARCH S1st, 1875.

It is of the very highest importance that master of a ship should be a man about whose reliability there is not the faintest shadow of doubt. He is placed in charge not only of much valuable property, in the shape the wants and sut the wishes of purchasers. of the vessel and its cargo, but he is also responsible for what is of yet greater value, namely, human life. It is necessary, therefore, to ask, what in the name of wonder he can that the captain shall be steady, sober, and mean? Is he cong to open a linea-draper's conscientious. Unless he can be implicitly depended upon for these qualities, his abili- truted by the zerl he mentions, but to judge ties as a seaman, however brilliant they may be, weigh as naught in the balance. Many the heathen but in enting the wants of purlives have ere now been lost at sea owing! to the want of care and thought of the captain, who has gone below to indulge in conviviality, leaving the ship to be guided by approse that Mr. Taylor's object is to recrait bis subordinates. But cases of this kind are happily becoming much rarer. Masters of measuring ribbon and matching silks behind ships are far more deeply impressed with the a counter. Well, we congratulate them upon responsibility attaching to their position, and far less reckless of human life than was higher game. in bygone days. Most of the casualties which have occurred lately have been due more to causes over which the captains have had no control than from carelessness or negligence on their part.

Such a plea, however, could not be advanced in the case of the British schooner Trelevan Family, which stranded on the 7th instant. Not only was the captain of that vessel in a state of inebriety at the time the accident happened, but the mate was also in a like condition. Both of these officers were conclusively proved to have been the worse for liquor and unfit for duty at a critical moment. The master went below to sleep before the ship was clear of the Chow Chatti Rocks, and when it bumped on the rocks neither he nor the mate were in a fit state to flag flying considerably over the sixual period perform the duties required of them. Under these circumstances, the public will very heartily concur in the sentence passed vice beving been completed as far back as upon them by the Naval Court which was held the other day at Amoy to Charles Shadwell will be retained by him until inquire into their conduct. First of all, in the very centre of the Harbour, in a atraight line with Dalhousie Pier obelisk and the Fort Canning flagstaff, a buoy is moored in 8 fathoms water on which is a placerd warning all merchant vossels that the man-of-war anchorage stands for one cable's length on each side of this buoy, which means that 1,200 feet of the centre of the Harbour, extending from Dalhousic Picr nearly two miles out, is reserved Tanjong Kutong shore makes clear. Then, since Gunjunued seized the books. on the Westward side of the reserved line, the anchorage for merchant shipping has been and. a being gradually narrowed by the engranchment of the fishing stakes on this side of Tanjong Pagar point, which are gradually being extended further out and down towards the middle of the Harbour, so that if not checked we may find these fishing easkes not ally disputing the boundary line for the men-of-war. In addition, moreover, to the serious circumscribing of the Harbour anchorage which the extension of those fishing stakes is effecting, they make it most dangerous for sailing vessels getting into and out of the Hurbour in that direction at night, not only from the obstruction they afford, but on account of the confusing offects of the lights which they exhibit : and to obtain any accurate knowledge of the number or bearing of those stakes is impossible, for the reseen that many of them are removed in one montoon and set down in another. It is true, and pay the fees on their licenses, but their extension in the manner we have described should not be encouraged on that account.

We are mistaken if this does nobturn out to be the most effectual metho of "opening China" that has yet been discovered. With regard to our own commercial interests, of course, the free competition of the buge population of China would revolutionies some

But such an effect must be very gradual; and in the meantime the more influx of English skill could not fail in producing a teneboul effect on our ordinary trade and other relations with China, notice has been taken by the French authoand a connection so close as that which bids increase, on the part of China, in the desire of planted in August, on a thin stratum of fair-to-be established would certainly lead to an communication with this country. Our iron trade, though less independent, cannot be affected for many yours to come, though it is quite possible that this nation may, sooner than has been anticipated, even by those who have threatened us with an approaching exhaustion of our coal-fields, be destined to undergo a struggle for her commercial supremay. We may, perhaps, hope that this prospect will afford matter for some serious consideration to English capitalists and labourers in the midat of the disastro us and suicidal struggles which have become almost epidemie among us. The edifice of our trade has not been built up by the blind operation of unintelligent force, nor by the mere calculation of proportions, balances, and percentages. If an Englishman was the first to introduce he potato into Enrope, a Frenchmen has discovered the method of making the supply constant throughout the year. Luxury, indeed, an command new potatoes at almost any time. But the scapy, insipid root, which costs so much, and is reared with such difficulty, is not a proper potate, or at least does not taste like one. There is always a disagreeable suggestion the forcing pit and the greenhouse. A French peasant has met the difficulty, grappled with it and conquered it. After trying every rind of soil in which to sow the routs, he at last hit upon the notion of employing salt, and found it to answer admirably. He made his experiments in scoret, so as to be cortain of success. That success is now ascertained, and rities of the new method. The roots are a pinch of compost, and the earth heaped over that. In September the ground is dug again. and in October it is weeded. In the middle of January the grop is ripe, each root bearing seven or eight potatoes attached to it. The anocess of the new method bas only just been announced. Last August twelve wonth the inventor laid down bit roots and followed out the programme we have given. -Esaminer. DRUIDICAL WEDDING. The following description of a marriage in the Druidical days is given in Saintine's

Muths of the Rhine: ing of a whip is heard; hogs, sheep and small ozen are driven aside to make way for Stilton-on-the-Cut, where he was going to a kind of procession, consisting of grave and solemn men and women.

It is a wedding. Two young people have just had their union blessed by the priests under the sacred oak. The bride is dressed in black and wears a wreath of dark leaves on her head. She walks in the midst of her friends. A matron, who walks on her left, holds before her eyes a white cloth; it is a shroud in which she right a Druid intones a chant in which he enumerates in solemn rythm all the troubles and all the anxieties which await her in married life.

From this day, young wife, you alone will have to bear all the burden of your united household.

You will have to attend the baking-oven, You will wash the linen at the fountain and you will make up the clothing. You will attend to the cow and even to the horse if your husband requires it.
